SURPLUS MONCY DUE THE PEOPLE. There is something singular and alarming in the history of the surplus money which was ordered to be divided amongst the several states. After a long strugale, the friends of the people, the Whigs, and a few Van Buren men who joined them, succeeded in obtaining the passage of a law dividing the money. But the Van Buren administration always opposed the law and of the deposite law emboddened the great body have contrived all kinds of plans to keep the money back, and at last they, told the people, that although there was, but one year before, so much money in the Treasury that they did intration, and anticipate the difficulties which not know what to do with it, it was all gone, or not at present available. The people may well ask where is it? What has become of it? ence that, if this bill is carried, it will be carried And the Whige did so ask, and no well their told that it would be forthcoming bye and bye. the design of securing to this Government the The Whige were obliged to be content with a · law postponing the October installment until the Jet Jan. Mr. Phillips says: "To avail of the public credit for the purpose of cienting an unnecessary debt, is a policy which will find but few advocates even among those who have held to the exploded theory that, in some of its influences, a public debt may be a public blessing. But then the use of the public credit has become the only means of providing for the payment of a debt actually incurred, it is not an untried expedient in finance, or a measure of doubtful utility, promptly to tesort to it; more copecially when at this moment, the Government is suffering as well as the people, not so much from the want of means as from the difficulty of rendering them available. on account of the derangement of the currency and when the judicious use of the public credit may operate to some extent, as a remedy to the disorders of the currency. I proceed, then, upon the presumption that the Treasury is unable, in its present condition, to provide for the payment of the fourth instalment; and l'agree with the advocates of the bill that the payment in money, shall be postponed; I differ from them only in regard to what should be the substitute for present payment. They propose to postpone the payment, and to renew the obligation by declaring it postponed; I desire to renew the obligation in another form, and, instead of furnishing to the States the security of an implied pledge of future legislation, which is of no pecuniary value until it is redeemed, to grant the more available security of those certified pledges of the public faith which will enable the States forthwith to raise the money upon the credit of this government. The time of payment at the Pressury may be definite or indefinite, as the House prefer; and the obligation imposed upon the Government can be no greater and no other than what may be supposed to be intended by "The next article will review and explain the ment supplies, for the Florida war. 'Lo follow the course preferred by the advocates of the bill, the debtor would propose to the creditor, that instead of tradering any negotiable security, he should barely make a memorandum in his account book, actting forth the fact of postponement, with an understanding that it should be regarded as a pledge of payment a mode of adjustment so exclusively beneficial to one party and injurious to the other, that no debtor could deem it respectful to suggest it. "Inc representations which have been made in the course of the debate will give us some idea of the disastrous consequences that must result to many of the States from the postponement of payment. In some of the States a orks of improvement, the construction of railroads and canals, and the erection of public buildings, have been undertaken upon the security of this fund; and they must be suspended. or, at best, can only be prosecuted in the face of a formidable obstacle. In other States, the fund has been applied to the creation or enlargement of a system for the support of schools; and this beneficent subject must be hindered, if the means of further aid, which we have promined are withheld. RAILROAD ACCIDEST. The lumber care upon the branch of the Rail Road in the city. came through Harlow St. before daylight yesterday merning, with frightful velocity, rousing from their slumbers every one in the vicinity of the track. The cars were laden with wood, and in decreading the bill north-of the Depot the brake by which the vehicles are controlled gave way, and they dashed on with a speed increasing with the descent. One of the men employed upon the Cars, supposing that they would inevitably be precipitated into the river, ventured to leap from them into the street. In thelattempt, his dress became entangled in the wood he was drawn under the cars, and the wheels passed over him. One leg was nearly seyered from the body and he was shockingly bruised and mangled. There is but little hope of his recovery.

Not troubling himself, however, at the time, with an inquiry into the matter, the creditor arrested his debtor, and brought him to this city, where he was lodged in just. Hither the lady followed him and here the circumstances were disclosed, which have doomed a pure young creature to a broken heart, and will probably terminate in her early death, or a life more horrible than the grave.

From the information we have received, (and it is furnished us on unquestionable whom we change we therefor a ppears that M. A. J. the lady of whom we change we therefor a ppears that M. A. C.* when she became acquainted with the man to whom she was afterward married. She was an orohan, and it is said inherited a large fortune, which was under the ured with romance. She was young, too, only 16, and, in addition to extraordinary beauty, possessed of every accomplishment of intellect and education. The villain who deluded her, was introduced to her relatives as a gentleman of standing and respectability, and by his perlittle or nu cargo in. Saw nothing on the sonat graces and consummate tact, was well this that day he found a little hay which he calculated to win the affections of an inexperi-

Mr Henderson has best all his mone; [croped with the fiscinating stranger, to whom she was married in Detroit. It was not until on. He came up last night in our news boat, her arrival in this city that she discovered the fatal secret of her husband's former marriage. The person who gave her the information states that he never beheld a more heart rending Cant. Carr, of Ellsworth, was totally lost on scene. The conviction that she had been duped by him upon whom she had placed her heart's richest affections, with whom but a moment be-lore, she had expressed her Willingness to die in a prison, dogether with the thought that she was not his wife, produced an alternate struggle between pride and love, such as can only be understood by those who have learned its horrors by experience. Nature, ever kind to its tenderest flowers, left Miss J., long insensible to her fate. Another, and perhaps little less bilter affliction, was in reserve. The unprincipled vrilain had circulated far and wide, a report that they had never been married, and that she was only one of the many, whose love he had won without the ceremony of legal union. This story too reached her eurs, and the conviction of its truth gave another and deeper pang to its wounded spirit, For him she had given up all the home of her fathers, the associates of her childhout, the friends she loved and how had the wealth of her heart been repaid? He, for whom all had been sacrificed, determined on a still farther sacrifice of her only remaining treasure ther good name; and by a pitiful and malicious falsehood. endeavored to complete the ruin his arts and wickedness had devised. In the meantime, the author of her sorrow and disgrace, having procured his liberation from prison, has gone we know not whither and escaped for a time the consequence of his offence. But though the law, tardy and atterly impotent as it is in mustters of this kind, may be ineffectual to inflict upon such a being the punishment life trimes demand, there is an avenger in his own conscience, if there is one spark of humainty yet School, together w leit, which sooner or later must award him a retribution more learnabinery affly human tribu-
